Jonathan Burleigh is Chair and a founding member of Bodman's Enterprise Procurement Group (EPG).

Jonathan facilitates increased efficiency, reduced risk and reduced legal spend for his clients in the commercial contracting and transactional space.

Over the past eleven years, Jonathan has negotiated thousands of agreements with a multitude of vendors representing billions of dollars in spend. This level of experience (EPG negotiated more than 2,250 contracts in 2018) provides familiarity with many of the vendors commonly utilized by his clients.

Jonathan's practice centers around a service-oriented, team approach to deliver effective and flexible legal support for the corporate procurement and sourcing functions of his commercial clients. This approach provides clients with cost certainty, reduced transactional times and reduced risk through improved contractual terms.

By working closely with his clients' procurement/sourcing departments, business teams and internal counsel, Jonathan works to close commercial transactions efficiently while helping clients understand and evaluate the important legal issues without hindering the client's business goals.

Although Jonathan has negotiated agreements and managed projects across the spectrum of business relationships, he has developed specific expertise in the banking, automotive, specialty manufacturing and professional services spaces in following areas:

- information technology
- business process and technology outsourcing
- banking and securities (including debit and credit card and processing agreements)
- corporate outsourcing
- HR provider and benefits agreements
- professional and consulting services
- marketing engagements and sponsorships
- records management
- security services and equipment
