

Enterprise Procurement advancing efficiencies

Over the last decade, Bodman's Enterprise Procurement Group (EPG) has represented clients in efficiently drafting and negotiating thousands of procurement agreements for all manner of software, products, and services, involving billions of dollars in spend, resulting in increased flexibility, reduced risk, and significant cost savings for our clients.

We have developed unique processes for managing our practice that set us apart from our competitors. First, we think like corporate procurement professionals. Bodman structured its EPG primarily around the corporate procurement function itself. EPG attorneys handle transactions across all of the subject matter areas reflected in our services categories, as well as other industry-specific subject matter areas, working in conjunction with our clients' procurement groups, applicable business team members, and in-house counsel.

Second, we have established intake and workflow processes that streamline the handling of all transactions. This structure sets us apart from firms who segregate attorneys by the subject matter of the contract. We leverage the depth of our group across the breadth of our subject matter knowledge to achieve transactional efficiency, fast turnaround times, and lower overall fees than our competitors.

Our attorneys negotiate more than 1,300 transactions annually. We serve a variety of industries, with concentrations in banking, automotive, construction, health care, chemicals, pharmaceuticals, non-profit, education, and professional sports. We handle transactions in almost every aspect of our clients' operations. Because of the high volume of transactions we handle, we have specific and recent experience with many of the largest vendors to the industries we serve. Our knowledge of vendor contracts and typical bargaining tactics, and familiarity with industry best practices, help us achieve favorable terms quickly. Our advanced intake and workflow processes allow us to handle large and small projects efficiently.

For our larger clients with a sophisticated procurement and legal infrastructure, our structure and processes allow us to serve as a seamless extension of their capabilities, which dramatically increases the capacity of their existing resources and decreases overall transaction times. For smaller clients, our structure and processes allow us to serve efficiently as their de facto procurement infrastructure, at a fraction of the cost of bringing this capability in-house.
